

Employees should keep an eye out for identity theft

Kent County has received several notices recently that are indicative of probable fraudulent unemployment insurance claims and a fraudulent direct deposit request. A few of these notices often contain an employee's name and correct social security number, but sometimes not.

As a result, the Personnel Office will need to verbally confirm all changes to future direct deposit and/or similar financial document changes for employees and retirees. Please provide a cell phone number if you submit such a request by mail or email in order to be contacted by telephone for confirmation – be prepared to answer a security type question only known by the Kent County Personnel Office when contacted. Employees/retirees are encouraged to personally deliver such financial change forms directly to the Personnel Office for visual confirmation.

If the Personnel Office is alerted to any potential fraud, we will attempt to inform you via telephone, so you may take necessary precautions to protect yourself from identify theft and/or fraud.

Please see the following press release previously issued by the Delaware Department of Labor on Fraud Prevention guidelines for employers and claimants to protect against identity theft and fraud involving unemployment benefits during the COVID-19 pandemic:

Over the past few weeks, several states have reported incidents of identity theft and payment fraud regarding unemployment benefits during this pandemic. States such as New York, Rhode Island, and Washington State have seen an increase in fraudulent activity regarding Unemployment Insurance Benefits.

This type of fraud is not limited to employers and employees, it may also impact the general public who may or may not be receiving unemployment insurance benefits.

The following are signs of potential Unemployment Insurance benefit fraud that all should be aware of;

Guidelines for Active Employees and the General Public Who Have Not Applied for Unemployment:

You may have received fraudulent correspondence if you have received any of the following:

- a letter stating that you have received a monetary determination regarding unemployment insurance.

- a notification that you have failed the Unemployment Insurance application security verification assessment
- or a letter notifying you of your potential eligibility for Pandemic Unemployment Assistance (PUA), but you have not applied for unemployment.

Guidelines for Employers:

- If you receive a separation notice for an employee who is still employed. This may be a sign of fraud.
- If you receive a separation notice for an employee who was laid off prior to the pandemic, you may want to consider reaching out to that former employee to determine whether they applied for Unemployment insurance.

During this Pandemic, the Delaware Department of Labor has identified attempts of identity theft and/or fraud regarding Unemployment Insurance benefits due to failed security verification checks.

We will continue to work collaboratively with State and federal agencies to safeguard personal information and ensure that we provide Unemployment Insurance benefits only to those who apply legally. Any attempts at fraudulent activity will be addressed and referred to law enforcement. The DOL routinely screens out benefit fraud attempts with the verification checks built into our automated system and during this pandemic has not identified any successful attempts of identity theft and/or fraud regarding Unemployment Insurance benefits.

We ask all Delawareans to be vigilant in reporting possible fraudulent activity or identity theft. Please send any relevant information to the Delaware Department of Labor by sending an email to uifraud@delaware.gov. Please include any information that may support our investigation into the incident. Please report the incident to your local police department, and finally file a complaint with Fraud and Consumer Protection Division at State Attorney General's Office. This division is designed to help victims of identity theft. To file a complaint call (302) 577-8600 or visit <https://attorneygeneral.delaware.gov/fraud/cpu/complaint/> where your complaint can be filed online.

Stolen Unemployment Benefits: How to detect and resolve this form of identity theft

Fraudsters are taking advantage of the COVID-19 crisis to file false unemployment claims using stolen identity information. It is a particularly cruel fraud that, when successful, drains people's unemployment benefits and creates further economic hardship. People who are victims of data breaches or identity theft may be more vulnerable to unemployment fraud. This crime can happen to people who have a job, and it can happen to people who are unemployed.

Unemployment benefits fraud is when someone uses your name, Social Security Number, and other personal information to attempt to collect unemployment benefits fraudulently. It is a type of identity theft.

To get victims' benefits, fraudsters typically set up an unemployment account in another person's name online and then file unemployment claims. The fraudster takes steps to divert the unemployment benefits to themselves or to a crime ring so that when the claims are paid out, the money goes to the fraudster.

When the crime is successful, funds that would have gone to unemployed people are drained by fraudsters and criminals.

One of the primary ways people may discover they have become a victim of this crime is when they file an application for unemployment benefits and discover that a claim has already been submitted in their name.

Why is this happening now?

Unemployment benefits fraud and identity theft were already common crimes in the United States before COVID-19 struck. To address fraud, states already had safeguards in place to protect unemployment systems against fraud. However, those protections worked at normal applicant volumes.

Due to the rapid onset of the economic impact of the coronavirus crisis and the expanded unemployment benefits under the US CARES Act, states' systems are delivering expanded unemployment benefits to tens of millions of people who have lost their jobs as a result of COVID-19. Fraudsters are taking advantage of the rapid influx of extra cash into the unemployment system as well as new stresses on the systems due to historically high numbers of applicants to slip through the cracks.

What are states doing?

Most, if not all, states have either already taken or begun to take additional steps to protect their systems from unemployment benefit fraud in the new environment. Some states have instituted extra protections such as stopping certain types of transfers altogether, or adding an additional wait period before benefits are paid in order to catch fraudulent applications. Some states are now mailing letters when an unemployment claim is filed, instead of just relying on electronic notifications.

A number of states have issued helpful FAQs and statements regarding the increase in unemployment fraud and actions they have taken. These FAQs, when available, are linked in the chart below.

Who is at highest risk for this crime?

- People who have been the victim of a data breach that exposed their SSN may be at greater risk.
- People who are already the victim of identity theft may be at greater risk.
- People who have given their personal information and paid a fee to an individual claiming they are filing unemployment claims for a state agency may also be at greater risk. States do not charge a fee for filing for unemployment benefits. Any requests for fees for filing is likely to be a scam.

Tip-offs that you may be a victim of this crime:

- If you receive a notification that you have failed the security verification for your unemployment application;
- If you receive a letter from your state saying you have received a determination regarding unemployment insurance, and you did not apply for unemployment benefits;
- If you receive a letter from the state notifying you that you are potentially eligible for Pandemic Unemployment Assistance (PUA), but you have not applied for unemployment; or,
- If you have given your personal information to a person who is cold-calling you on the telephone, at your door, or on social media claiming they will file unemployment benefits on your behalf for a fee.

What can you do if you think this may have happened to you? How can you protect yourself if it hasn't?

- If you learn an unemployment claim has been filed in your name, and you did not file the claim, make a report to your State Department of Labor immediately. Each state has a contact point for making this report. In unemployment benefit fraud, reporting the crime immediately to the state Department of Labor is absolutely crucial to begin the recovery process. The chart below has links for each state's unemployment fraud report page.

- Notify your employer of the fraudulent claim, because they will also need to file documentation.
- File a complaint at the National Center for Disaster Fraud <https://www.justice.gov/disaster-fraud/ncdf-disaster-complaint-form> or (866) 720-5721.
- A pro-active step you may consider is to create an online benefits account with your state regardless of your employment status. After you have created the account, if you are employed, you do not need to file an unemployment claim. Simply having the account can pose obstacles to a fraudster, because they cannot as easily use your stolen identity information to open a fresh account using your information without your knowledge, or in some cases, without alerting the system of their unauthorized behavior. To set up a benefits account, most states will request your Social Security Number, and ask you to set up a PIN and a password in order to open the account.
- Traditional identity theft advice applies to this form of fraud, for example:
  - Ensure your computer hygiene is in good order. In particular, if you have not already done so, ensure that the passwords to all of your financial and other accounts are unique. Wherever you can, add a second factor for authentication. When asked to create a PIN, or Personal Identification Number, don't use your birthday or a guessable number. 0000, 2020, 1234, etc. are highly guessable numbers. If you have not changed your passwords in a while, now is a good time to get that done.
  - Take advantage of credit monitoring services if you have been notified your information was exposed in a data breach. If you do not have access to credit monitoring, use the Congressionally mandated www.annualcreditreport.com, where you can get a free credit report from each credit reporting bureau once each year.
  - If you have ongoing activities related to identity theft, you can set a security freeze that does not allow any new credit to be opened in your name. You can read more about security freezes and how they work at the World Privacy Forum Security Freeze Page: <https://www.worldprivacyforum.org/security-freeze/>.
  - For a detailed identity theft recovery plan, see the FTC's detailed interactive guide to build a customized recovery plan at: <https://www.identitytheft.gov/Steps>. Remember: for unemployment benefits fraud, the most important first step is to notify the state of the fraud. Then move forward to assess additional steps you may want to take.
